Pages 6-7, Article 4.1.1 Principles,

... • Voluntary substitution: Based on the decision and commitment of growers to abandon crops for illegal use, voluntary substitution is a fundamental principle of the programme, generating trust between communities and creating conditions that help to address the problem of crops for illegal use, notwithstanding the economic, social and environmental sustainability of the communities and the respective territories. This implies actions to promote voluntary substitution and the definition of economically and socio-environmentally sustainable alternatives with communities that can strengthen family economies and guarantee dignified living conditions. The above is notwithstanding the fact that the process of substitution and sustainability requires government support under the terms agreed with the communities. (See the point on “Agreement with communities” and “Participative construction and development of Integrated Municipal and Community Plans for Substitution and Alternative Development”.) ...

Pages 17-18, Article 4.1.3.6 Components of the integrated substitution plans,

... Plan for immediate attention and development of production projects
Once the commitment to substituting and not replanting crops for illegal use has been made, the following measures will be implemented to facilitate the transition of growers, harvesters and sharecroppers to legal economic activities via immediate support measures to guarantee their subsistence and the food security of their family nuclei and ensure income and conditions of well-being and buen vivir for growers, harvesters, sharecroppers and communities in general via the structuring of production processes with long-term sustainability:

1. For the family nuclei of growers linked to crops for illegal use:
  - a. Immediate food aid, consisting of the direct provision of goods for up to (* government proposal: six months; FARC-EP proposal: two years), in line with the size of each family nucleus, individual circumstances and the needs of each population and region, in addition to projects to generate income. Priority will be given to local suppliers for the supply of markets and the solidarity and associative economy will be promoted to allow the communities to contract their supply with the government.
  - b. The establishment of home vegetable gardens and small-scale livestock with the corresponding technical support, provision of supplies and food for animals, in line with the preference of each family nucleus.
  - c. Projects for the rapid generation of income, such as short-cycle crops, fish farming and poultry, with the corresponding technical support, aiming to meet the immediate needs of family nuclei and provide timely and sufficient substitution of income that previously originated from crops for illegal use, in line with the preference of each family nucleus and the conditions and potential of the zone. ...

Pages 13-16, Article 4.1.3.5 Participative construction and development of Integrated Municipal and Community Plans for Substitution and Alternative Development (Planes Integrales Comunitarios y Municipales de Sustitución y Desarrollo Alternativo, PISDAs),

In light of the political, economic, social, environmental and cultural nature of the problem to be addressed and the effects of the lack of development in rural areas, the illegal economy and violence associated with crops for illegal use, broader community participation is required, including those directly involved in cultivation, to formulate, implement and monitor the PISDAs and thus comply with the objectives of the PNIS. For this purpose, and to strengthen local democracy, the municipality and its authorities must play a key role, together with communities.

This process of participative planning involving communities, the national government and local authorities must result in the formulation and implementation of integrated substitution plans to deliver a structural transformation of the territory and hence the permanent solution to the problem of crops for illegal use.

Community assemblies

Community assemblies will be supported and strengthened to implement the bottom-up participative planning process and monitoring bodies will be created at the municipal level and for the community assemblies.

The community assemblies form the basis of the participative planning system. This begins with the formulation of a proposal with an integrated vision of the territory and identifies needs, opportunities and priorities in the context of the PNIS and in line with its content.

The community assemblies will comprise all the communities in the affected zone, including producers of crops for illegal use, and will guarantee the effective participation of women in these spaces. The necessary assemblies will be created together with the communities in each municipality, taking into account the characteristics of the territory and the populations, specifying their territorial scope.

The participative construction of an integrated vision of the territory first requires a proposal based on a collective diagnostic, making it possible to establish the social, economic and environmental profile of the territory, the needs for physical, social and institutional infrastructure, the prioritisation of projects that respond to these needs, the production potential and areas with crops for illegal use and their layout in the territory.

As the competent national authority, the PNIS will define and implement a participative planning methodology, guided by the methodology for producing the PDETs and which must reflect the contributions of the assemblies. The PNIS will provide technical support to communities in the process of developing the integrated vision and the proposal, identifying the projects and priorities in coordination with the municipalities.

The PNIS will be the competent national authority, headed by the Office of the President of the Republic, in coordination with departmental and municipal authorities. It will have a civil status, notwithstanding coordination with the necessary state authorities to guarantee its full operation, including those responsible for the security and protection of communities (as necessary and in line with the corresponding description in this agreement).*

Page 11, 4.1.3.1 Security conditions for communities and territories affected by crops for illegal use

In addition to creating the conditions to satisfy the economic and social rights of the population and promote integrated development, the sustainability of the PNIS and compliance with its objectives also require the provision of guarantees and conditions of security for the communities and territories affected by crops for illegal use, strengthening the institutional presence of the state and its capacity to protect communities, particularly in the face of coercion and threats, in addition to its capacity for the prohibition and legal enforcement of territorial drug-trafficking networks under the concept of security set out in the final agreement.

The protection of communities and the guarantee of the right to life and well-being for the rural population also requires the removal of mines. After signing the final agreement and in the context of its implementation, the national government will implement a mine removal and clearance programme in the areas of the national territory affected by the presence of anti-personnel mines and unexploded ammunition.

Corruption [Summary]

The entire agreement is a joint draft on solutions to the problems of illegal drugs under sub-heading 4 of the General Agreement. It acknowledges the connection between illegal drugs and achieving peace and that especially the poor regions were affected by the growing, production and sale of the drugs. To achieve a comprehensive peace, a general approach based on human rights and public health will be taken, also paying special attention to gender. As part of the structural transformation of the countryside of the Integrated Rural Reform (Reforma Rural Integral, the RRI), this programme will contribute to creating conditions of well-being and 'buen vivir' for the populations affected by these crops. The permanent solution to the problem of illegal drugs requires intensifying the fight against criminal drug-trafficking organisations and money laundering but also a development programme for the affected regions.

The new Integrated National Programme for the Substitution of Crops for Illegal Use (Programa Nacional Integral de Sustitución de Cultivos de Uso Ilícito, the PNIS), will be established to create material and immaterial conditions of well-being and buen vivir for the populations affected by crops for illegal use with a special focus on peasant communities. The PNIS will be the competent national authority, headed by the Office of the President of the Republic, in coordination with departmental and municipal authorities. The programme will contribute to structural transformations of rural society resulting from the implementation of the RRI, of which it forms part, and the launch of citizen participation mechanisms. The PNIS will be governed by the principles of participation, a differentiated approach, respect for norms such as democracy and human rights and the rule of law and voluntary substitution to generate trust between communities.

The objectives of the programme are:

- to overcome the conditions of poverty of the affected peasant communities
- to promote the voluntary substitution of illegal crops
- to generate opportunities for growers
- to contribute to the restoration of ecosystems
- to strengthen the capacities of peasant organisations
- to strengthen the relationships with the affected communities
- to contribute to meeting the objectives of the Food Security (Sovereignty) System
- to strengthen the institutional presence of the state in the territories affected by illegal crops
- to build the management capacity of communities and their organisations
- to ensure the sustainability of the programme

Elements of the PNIS include:

- Security guarantees for affected communities and territories, including the strengthening of institutional presence and the removal of mines. For specific details please see 'security (general)' box.
- Agreements between the communities, the national government and the territorial entities, defining the schedule and the commitments by each party.
- Prioritisation of territories in line with the following criteria: the density of illegal crops, natural national parks, priority zones under the PDETs, taking into account the principle of integration with the RRI and cases in which the communities outside the territories detailed in the above criteria have accepted differentiated criminal treatment

It acknowledges the connection between illegal drugs and achieving peace and that especially the poor regions were affected by the growing, production and sale of the drugs. To achieve a comprehensive peace, a general approach based on human rights and public health will be taken, also paying special attention to gender. As part of the structural transformation of the countryside of the Integrated Rural Reform (Reforma Rural Integral, the RRI), this programme will contribute to creating conditions of well-being and 'buen vivir' for the populations affected by these crops. The permanent solution to the problem of illegal drugs requires intensifying the fight against criminal drug-trafficking organisations and money laundering but also a development programme for the affected regions.

The new Integrated National Programme for the Substitution of Crops for Illegal Use (Programa Nacional Integral de Sustitución de Cultivos de Uso Ilícito, the PNIS), will be established to create material and immaterial conditions of well-being and buen vivir for the populations affected by crops for illegal use with a special focus on peasant communities. The PNIS will be the competent national authority, headed by the Office of the President of the Republic, in coordination with departmental and municipal authorities. The programme will contribute to structural transformations of rural society resulting from the implementation of the RRI, of which it forms part, and the launch of citizen participation mechanisms. The PNIS will be governed by the principles of participation, a differentiated approach, respect for norms such as democracy and human rights and the rule of law and voluntary substitution to generate trust between communities.

The objectives of the programme are:

- to overcome the conditions of poverty of the affected peasant communities
- to promote the voluntary substitution of illegal crops
- to generate opportunities for growers
- to contribute to the restoration of ecosystems
- to strengthen the capacities of peasant organisations
- to strengthen the relationships with the affected communities
- to contribute to meeting the objectives of the Food Security (Sovereignty) System
- to strengthen the institutional presence of the state in the territories affected by illegal crops
- to build the management capacity of communities and their organisations
- to ensure the sustainability of the programme

Elements of the PNIS include:

- Security guarantees for affected communities and territories, including the strengthening of institutional presence and the removal of mines. For specific details please see 'security (general)' box.
- Agreements between the communities, the national government and the territorial entities, defining the schedule and the commitments by each party.
- Prioritisation of territories in line with the following criteria: the density of illegal crops, natural national parks, priority zones under the PDETs, taking into account the principle of integration with the RRI and cases in which the communities outside the territories detailed in the above criteria have accepted differentiated criminal treatment
- Differentiated criminal treatment

Page 13, Article 4.1.3.4 Differentiated criminal treatment
In the end-of-conflict scenario and on account of its contribution to building peace and ensuring the most effective use of legal resources against criminal organisations linked to drug trafficking and based on an integrated vision of the permanent solution to the problem of crops for illegal use, which has a multi-causal origin, including causes of a social nature, the government undertakes to process the legislative changes required to allow amnesty from criminal proceedings and terminating criminal punishment of small-scale growers who are or have been linked to the cultivation of crops for illegal use and who formally express their decision to renounce cultivating or maintaining crops for illegal use to the competent authorities, within a period of two years, counted from the taking force of the new law.
The voluntary expression of renouncing crops for illegal use and ensuring this remains permanent may be on an individual basis or as part of substitution agreements with communities.
